Boston, June 10, 1844.

Dear bro. George:

Catharine arrived at our house from Nashua and Lowell, on Friday, where she has had a very pleasant visit. Her mother came with her, but is stopping elsewhere in the city, and will go with her to Northampton. They will leave for N. on Friday morning next, and Helen and myself will accompany them. Mother and Sarah will go to Providence immediately on our return home. Mother continues quite feeble, and is troubled occasionally with a slow fever, with loss of appetite. She is evidently not long for this evil world, but is ready for her departure at any moment. Her life has been a long and useful one. Sarah has just taken the cars for Lynn, to spend the night with the Johnsons, who were so kind to Anne when she was taken ill under their roof. I do not know when James Boyle be in the city, but I hear that he was at the Concord (N. H.) meeting last week, and that it was a grand one. Your wife and babe are well. Tell George Thompson we are coming, and shall rejoice to see his dear young face again. Love to all the friends.

Yours, ever, Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
